OUR CLAIM AND OUR APPEAL

Christ Church Cathedral, being the Mother Church of the United Dioceses of Dublin and Glendalough, has a special claim on the Church-people of these Dioceses. Being also the Metropolitan Cathedral of the Southern Province of the Church of Ireland, it can justly appeal to a still wider circle for sympathy and support. Christ Church is closely connected with the Synod Hall of the Church of Ireland, and the meeting of the General Synod each year is immediately preceded by the Service of Holy Communion in the Cathedral. Similar Services mark the opening of the Diocesan Synods of Dublin, Glendalough and Kildare, and Meath. Here the Bishops of the Southern Province are consecrated, and here the Clergy of the United Dioceses are ordained. Here the various Diocesan organisations, such as the Mothers' Union, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Girls' Brigade, etc., hold their annual Festival Services. Here a "Quiet Day" for the Clergy of the United Dioceses of Dublin, Glendalough and Kildare is held annually under the direction of the Archbishop. The Chapter is composed of Clergymen beneficed or licensed in the United Dioceses, whose ability and faithful service thus receive recognition from the Archbishop. Eight of the Canons are chosen from the Diocese of Dublin, and four from Glendalough.

The high standard of music and reverent rendering of the Choral Services are marked features in the worship offered to Almighty God in Christ Church Cathedral. The efficient maintenance of such Choral Services (which is a necessary condition of retaining the Roe Endowment) involves great expense, and the necessity for constant repairs of the fabric repeatedly entails heavy expenditure which the available funds of the Cathedral are insufficient to meet. In view of the fact that for several years past the income from the Endowment Funds and ordinary contributions had proved inadequate to maintain the services and pay the necessary expenses connected with the Cathedral, the Dean and Chapter and the Cathedral Board felt bound to make special efforts to put the finances of the Cathedral on a better footing. Accordingly, early in 1922, a special appeal, on lines recommended by a representative meeting of Incumbents of the United Diocese, under the presidency of His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, was issued to the Incumbents and Parochial Treasurers throughout the Dioceses of Dublin and Glendalough, asking for an annual contribution of at least £1 from each Parish to the Funds of the Cathedral. This appeal resulted in the receipt of contributions varying from £1 to £5 from 36 Parishes, and also several individual subscriptions. It was a disappointment to the Cathedral Board that some of these Parishes did not send contributions in 1925. The Board again appeal to all who have responded to their request hitherto to continue their kind help; and they earnestly ask the other Parishes in the United Dioceses to recognise the claim of their Diocesan Cathedral and do their share in order to enable the Board to meet the special expenses involved in urgently needed repairs and upkeep. They also hope that other Church-people, who appreciate the need, will come to the assistance of the Mother Church of the Diocese and Metropolitan Cathedral of the Southern Province in this time of need by sending individual subscriptions.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Dean, or the Secretary to the Board, Chapter House, Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin.

Christ Church Cathedral: A SKETCH

The history of Christ Church Cathedral is intimately bound up with that of Dublin. In order to understand its beginning we must transport our minds back to a rough and rude period some 1100 years ago, when strife and wars were incessant. Dublin in those days was little more than a collection of mud houses built of wattles, daubed over with clay, and thatched with straw or sedge. Ptolemy, A.D. 140, mentions it by the name of "Eblana" (or "Deblana," whence some derive the name Dublin, which, however, probably represents the Irish words Dubh Linn, i.e., black water). It was also called by the Irish name, "Baile-atha-cliath," i.e., the town on the ford of hurdles, being built above the ford across the Liffey. Situated on the south side of the Liffey, Dublin was taken, and walled and fortified, by heathen Vikings from Norway in the ninth century. By the eleventh century these Norsemen (or Norwegians, sometimes mixed up with the Danes) had adopted Christianity, and a Bishop named Dunan (or Donat), an Irishman, was sent to them, probably from Canterbury. Dunan founded the Diocese of Dublin, which was confined to the walled city, then a small area extending only from Cornmarket to the Lower Castle Yard, and from the Liffey to Ship Street. Sitric, King of the Dublin Norsemen, gave Dunan a site for a Cathedral, and provided him with the means of building it, in the year 1038.

DUBLIN AND THE IRISH CHURCH.

It is important to notice that the Diocese of Dublin at that time was not connected with the Irish Church, which had been founded by St. Patrick, and which, from its first days, was independent of any foreign control until the English Conquest. Dublin was regarded as being in the Ecclesiastical Province of Canterbury. The Cathedral was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, but has been commonly called Christ Church, as is also the case with Canterbury Cathedral.

The Diocese, having been for over 100 years in the Province of Canterbury, transferred its allegiance to the Irish Church in the year 1152, and its Bishop was made Archbishop of the Eastern Province of Ireland.

ARCHBISHOP LAWRENCE O'TOOLE.

Ten years later Lorcan Ua Tuathail (or Lawrence O'Toole), Abbot of Glendalough, was appointed Archbishop of Dublin. He was its first Bishop to receive Irish consecration, being consecrated in Christ Church Cathedral by Gelasius, Archbishop of Armagh. About the year 1163 he caused the Cathedral Clergy to join the Order of Arrosian Canons (the first reformed branch of the Augustinian Order). He himself took the habit of the Order and lived with his Clergy in obedience to its Rule. The Prior ranked as a Mitred Abbot, and was recognized in the Diocese as the ecclesiastical next in position to the Archbishop.

THE ANGLO-NORMAN CONQUEST.

During the Episcopate of Archbishop Lawrence O'Toole, in the year 1170, Dublin was captured from the Norsemen by Anglo-Norman invaders under Richard, Earl of Pembroke (commonly called "Strongbow"), Robert Fitzstephen, and Reymund le Gros, who held it for their master, King Henry II. of England, who arrived in Dublin in the following year, and was present at Divine Worship in the Cathedral on Christmas Day, 1171. Sitric's Church was probably of very small dimensions, like the other Irish Churches of that period. No remnant of it now remains. After their conquest of Dublin, Strongbow and his companions, in co-operation with the Archbishop, set about the re-building of the Cathedral with commendable promptitude and noble generosity. Within the next three or four years the Crypt, the Choir and the Choir Aisles and the Transepts were built, and also two Chapels—dedicated, one to St. Edmund, King and Martyr, and the other to St. Mary the White and St. Lo. About the same time the Church of St. Mary in Bothe Street, afterwards used as a Lady Chapel in connection with the Cathedral, was built by the Archbishop.

A RIVAL CATHEDRAL.

Archbishop Lawrence O'Toole died in Normandy in 1180. [He was canonised 45 years later, and a Chapel in the South Transept was dedicated to him.] An Anglo-Norman, John Comyn, succeeded him as Archbishop. He apparently did not wish to follow the example of his predecessor in living among his Clergy and sharing their simple life. Accordingly he built a residence for himself in the meadows south of Dublin, outside the city wall, and beside it he erected a Collegiate Church, dedicating it to St. Patrick, which was constituted a Cathedral by Archbishop Henry de Loundres. It was consecrated in the year 1192, which was more than 150 years later than Christ Church. Such is the origin of the unusual circumstance that Dublin possesses two Cathedrals. It was probably the Archbishop's intention that St. Patrick's should supersede Christ Church as the Cathedral of the Diocese, but Christ Church maintained its position and received generous contributions from successive Anglo-Norman Archbishops who were buried within its walls. Equal rights were, however, claimed for St. Patrick's, and the rivalry between the two Cathedrals resulted in unfortunate quarrels and jealousies. These were composed in 1300, when an agreement, commonly called "compositio pacis," as to the respective rights of the two Cathedrals, was signed by the Clergy of Christ Church and St. Patrick's. In this it was agreed that the Archbishop of Dublin should in future be consecrated and enthroned in the Priory of the Holy Trinity; that each Church should be styled "Cathedral" and "Metropolitan;" and that Christ Church, being the greater, the mother and the elder Church, should have the precedence in all rights and concerns of the Church.

[It may be added here that from 1300 down to 1870 the two Cathedrals possessed jointly the rights of the Cathedral of the Diocese of Dublin, Christ Church having the precedence by reason of its seniority. After the Disestablishment of the Church of Ireland, the constitution of St. Patrick's was altered by the General Synod in 1872, and it ceased to be a Diocesan Cathedral of Dublin and was styled the National Cathedral, having an equal relation to all the Dioceses of Ireland; while Christ Church has continued to hold its original position of the Cathedral of the Diocese of Dublin and the Metropolitan Cathedral of the Southern Province, "retaining all its ancient prerogatives, rights and privileges as heretofore,"* being second only to Armagh].

THE CATHEDRAL RE-BUILT.

Of Strongbow's original Church there remain the Transepts and the Arches immediately adjoining, in the Romanesque style of architecture usually called Norman. The round-arched work here, ornamented with the characteristic chevron or zig-zag mouldings, may readily be distinguished from the later pointed-arched work of the Nave. [Through the munificence of Mr. Henry Roe, D.L., a wealthy citizen of Dublin, who generously undertook the complete restoration of the Cathedral, regardless of expense, the Choir, Choir-Aisles, and Chapels, built with the Transepts in Strongbow's time, and subsequently destroyed, were restored in 1871, under the direction of Mr. George Edmund Street, R.A., Architect, who had ascertained with singular skill the original plan of the Eastern end of the Church, from evidence afforded by the plan of the Crypt, some ancient foundations, and some fragments of the original structure still remaining in the South Ambulatory of the Choir. For this remarkable Church plan, combining an apsidal end with square-ended Eastern Chapels, no parallel is known to have existed save at Pershore Abbey, Worcestershire. The Cathedral, as it now stands, may be taken as a whole to represent faithfully the original structure of the 12th and early 13th century].

THE NAVE.

The building of the Nave was probably completed under Archbishop Luke, about 1230, after the development of the pointed style of architecture, and is a rare and beautiful example of what is known as the Early English or "Lancet" period of Gothic Architecture.

THE CHOIR AND CHAPELS.

Strongbow's Choir and subsidiary Chapels were destroyed about 1350 by Archbishop John de St. Paul, who extended the Church eastwards by an unsightly and crooked Choir, 102 feet in length. [This Choir, which was wholly destitute of architectural merit or interest, was removed in 1871, for the purpose of restoring the Church to its unique and beautiful plan, as designed in the 12th century.]

THE FALL OF THE ROOF.

The ruin of the Nave took place in Queen Elizabeth's time, A.D. 1562. The foundations (resting on a peat bog) moved on the sloping hill-side, and the arched stone roof fell in consequence into the Church, almost completely destroying the south side wall and part of the body of the Cathedral. [The debris of the fallen roof was permitted to remain, levelled and floored over, until 1871. Large portions of the ancient tiled floor were discovered on its removal. The north side wall of the Nave, which leans considerably from the perpendicular, is the original work of 1230. The South side, which was completely ruined by the fall of the roof, was restored from some fragments found on the site in 1871, which afforded conclusive evidence of its original correspondence in architectural character with the North side.]

STRONGBOW'S MONUMENT.

The fall of the roof and south wall and part of the body of the Church in April, 1562, broke Strongbow's monument; and the repairs of the building were shortly afterwards commenced.

That Strongbow's tomb was repaired in 1570 by Sir Henry Sidney, Lord Deputy, is recorded in a contemporary inscription, to be seen in the south wall near the present monument, which represents a cross-legged figure in chain armour with another recumbent, but imperfect, statue by its side. It is certain that Strongbow, the leader of the Anglo-Norman conquerors of Ireland, was buried in the Cathedral which he helped to re-build, but the present monument can hardly be the original one erected to his memory, notwithstanding the statement in the said inscription that the monument was set up again by Sir Henry Sidney. Another account says that Sir Henry brought the present monument from a Church in Drogheda, which is probably true, as it shows no sign of having been broken, and the arms are not those of Strongbow, but of the family of FitzOsbert of Drogheda. It was considered essential to have a "Strongbow's Tomb" in Christ Church, as it was frequently entered in leases and other deeds as the place at which money was to be paid. The half-length figure is probably the original monument of Strongbow's son, broken by the fall of the roof and trimmed by a stone mason. There appears to be much doubt as to the truth of the tradition that accounts for its shape by saying that Strongbow cut his son in two for showing cowardice in battle.

THE CATHEDRAL AND HISTORY.

Christ Church Cathedral has been the scene of many historical events and State pageants. From time immemorial it was regarded as the "State Church," or principal Chapel Royal of Ireland; and in it down to the 16th century the Lord Deputy, or Lord Lieutenant, and the high Civic authorities were invariably sworn into office. The four Irish Kings or Chiefs (O'Neill, O'Connor, O'Brien and MacMurrough) who submitted to Richard II. of England in 1395 kept their vigil, and were knighted by him, in the Cathedral.

As illustrating the race antagonism in Ireland in bygone centuries it is recorded that the local parliament, in which the Prior always held a seat, passed a law in 1380 that no native should be suffered to profess himself in the Priory of Christ Church, which enactment was so strongly upheld that, except in the reign of James II., no Irishman was admitted even as Vicar-Choral of Christ Church until John Stevenson became one of the pupils of its Choir School in the 18th century.

In 1487 Lambert Simnel, the Yorkist pretender to the throne of England, was crowned in the Cathedral as King Edward VI. as a rival to Henry VII. In 1493 David Winchester, Prior of the Cathedral, founded its Choir School, and 54 years later an annual pension was granted by King Edward VI. to augment the Choir. For this the Choir "did homage" in the Law Courts on the first day of every term down to the disestablishment of the Church of Ireland in 1870.

REFORMATION CHANGES.

The Archbishop of Dublin and most of the Bishops in Ireland accepted the changes consequent on the Reformation in England, when the supremacy of the King was established in place of that of the Pope, and they therefore retained possession of their Sees and Churches.

The Cathedral of the Holy Trinity remained a Priory down to the year 1541, when Henry VIII. by Letters Patent altered its constitution to that of a Cathedral with a Dean and Chapter—the last Prior, Painswick, being made the first Dean. The King confirmed the Cathedral in its ancient dignity as the second Metropolitan Church in Ireland, that of Armagh alone taking precedence. Since that time it has been commonly designated Christ Church Cathedral. Ten years later (on Easter Day, 1551) the Service was for the first time in Ireland sung in English instead of Latin; and nine years later (1560) the Bible was first read in English from a copy presented by Queen Elizabeth and chained to the Lectern in the Choir.

King Edward VI. increased the staff of the Cathedral, making an allowance for the purpose. Queen Mary confirmed the grant, and added another gift. King James I. further increased the revenues of the Cathedral. He also ordained that the Archdeacon of Dublin should have a stall in the Cathedral and a voice and seat in the Chapter. [The tenth Dean, William Morton, held the Bishopric of Kildare along with the Deanery, for some years before his death. The eleventh Dean, Welbore Ellis, installed in 1705, was also made Bishop of Kildare, from which time the Deanery was held "in commendam" with the Bishopric, down to the death of Bishop Lindsay in 1846. The reason for this arrangement was that while the Bishopric was worth only £150 a year, the endowment of the Deanery amounted to £5,200 a year.]

For many years, on the feasts of Christmas and Easter and the great State holidays, the Lord Deputy, or Lord Lieutenant, was wont to attend the Cathedral, as the Chapel Royal, in full state, with a Royal Guard of soldiers, king at arms and pursuivants, peers, commoners, and their households. In 1689 King James II. re-established the service of the Mass for about a year and a half during his sojourn in Dublin. King William III. presented the Cathedral with a magnificent set of church plate, silver gilt, beautifully embossed, and engraved with his royal monogram. This gift has been supposed to be a thank-offering for his victories in Ireland. Parliaments, at different times, were held within the Cathedral precincts, in the Common Hall of the Priory, and also the last convocations of the Irish Church, 1703-10. King George IV. attended Divine worship in the Cathedral on 19th August, 1821, which was the last visit of a reigning sovereign to the Cathedral. In 1868 the Prince and Princess of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra) attended Service in the Cathedral, on the occasion of their first visit to Ireland.

The custom of attendance in State by the Lord Mayor on Easter Day and Christmas Day was maintained for many centuries, whenever the occupant of the Civic Chair was a Member of the Church of Ireland; and until the Corporation of Dublin was superseded by City Commissioners in 1924, the Protestant Members of the Corporation were wont to attend in their robes of office on these festivals and occupy the Civic Pew.

HANDEL AND CHRIST CHURCH.

The first public performance of "The Messiah" was given on 13th April, 1742, in the Music Hall, Fishamble Street, by the choirs of Christ Church and St. Patrick's, Handel himself conducting the performance. The great Handel Memorial Festival was held in the Cathedral on 12th April, 1788, on the centenary of Handel's birthday, and another performance four days later, for the benefit of charitable institutions in Dublin.

RESTORATION OF THE CATHEDRAL.

Shortly after the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church of Ireland, on 2nd May, 1871, Mr. Henry Roe executed a deed undertaking to restore the Cathedral and build a Synod Hall, on the condition that Christ Church "should be connected (as in past ages) with the Synodical government of the Church, and be used for the celebration of all religious Services on the occasions of the meetings of the General and Diocesan Synods, and always be preserved as a Cathedral Church with all its ancient prerogatives, rights, and privileges." The restoration was undertaken in the year 1871, and completed in 1878, at the sole cost of Mr. Roe, who also erected a Synod Hall for the Church of Ireland, in immediate connection with the Cathedral, and contributed £20,000 as an endowment for the maintenance of its Choral Services. By his splendid benefactions, this generous citizen of Dublin rendered our ancient Cathedral in every way worthy of its position as the Metropolitan Cathedral of the Southern Province of Ireland and Diocesan Cathedral Church of the United Dioceses of Dublin and Glendalough, which status was confirmed to it by an Act of the General Synod in the year 1872, which re-constituted the Cathedral and provided that it should retain "all its ancient prerogatives, rights and privileges."

The Cathedral was solemnly re-opened on the feast of St. Philip and St. James, 1st May, 1878, by the Most Reverend Richard Chenevix Trench, Archbishop of Dublin.

DIMENSIONS.

The dimensions of the Cathedral are as follows:—Total exterior length, 200 feet; nave, 104 feet; choir, 58 feet. Interior breadth across transepts, 89 feet; across nave, 58 feet. Height of nave, 68 feet.

The long choir, erected by Archbishop John de St. Paul about 1350, and removed in 1871, was 102 feet in length.

THE ORGAN

The organ, originally built with three manuals in 1857 by Telford and Telford, Dublin, was removed from its position over the old screen, a fourth (solo) manual added, and rebuilt in a new organ gallery in the north transept, in 1878.

During the year 1923 it was entirely reconstructed and enlarged by the same firm, with the addition of a pneumatic Console overlooking the Choir, and with tubular pneumatic actions throughout (using about 3,500 yards of tin-lined tubing). The old hydraulic blower in the Crypt was replaced by electrically driven fans, with press button starter to the Console.

These improvements were carried out at a cost of £1,637, provided by voluntary contributions and by grants from the Beresford and Fredericton Funds. The organ, thus reconstructed and enlarged, is now a very fine instrument, containing 60 draw stops, with 2,666 pipes. If funds were available, a much desired improvement could be made by the addition of a new Cor Anglais and Tuba, which would add greatly to the effectiveness of the organ.

FISHAMBLE STREET MISSION

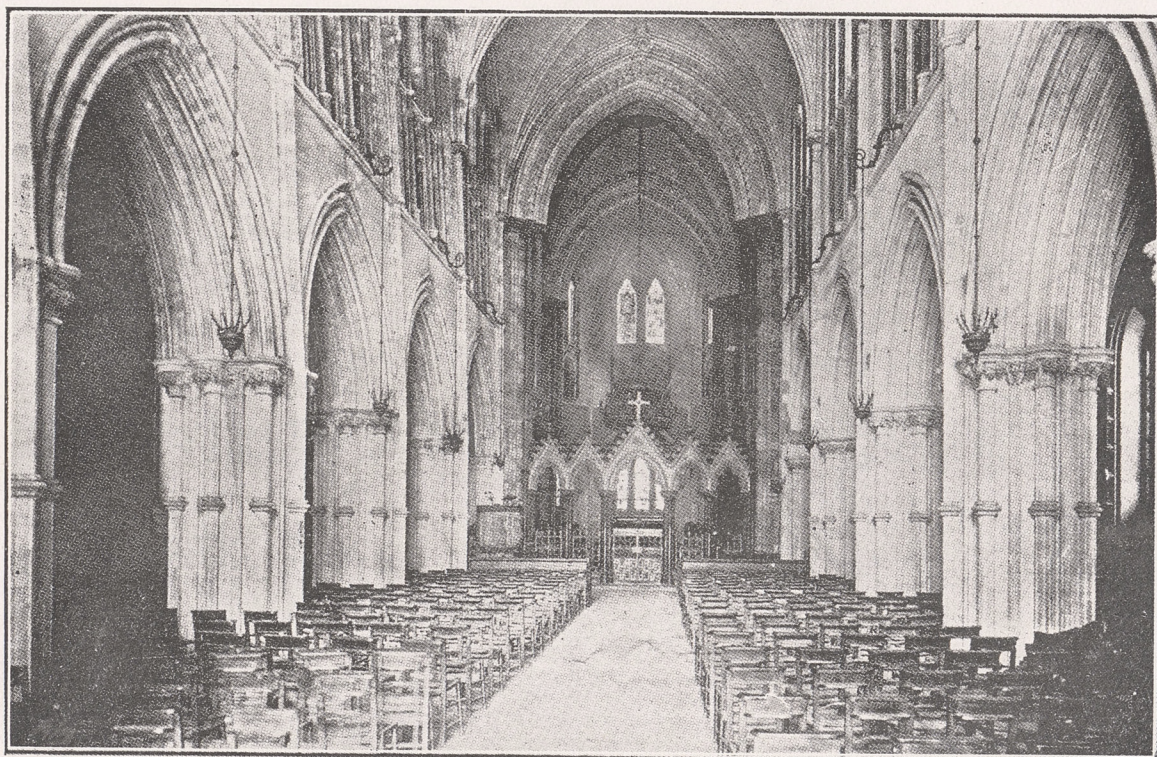

The Committee of the Fishamble Street Mission having, after long and careful consideration, resolved to close the Mission at the end of the year 1923, offered to transfer the buildings to the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Cathedral. The Cathedral Clergy had long felt the inconvenience of the insufficient accommodation provided by the then Grammar School for school purposes, and also for the use of our Boy Scouts, and the absence of any place available for a gymnasium and for the use of our past boys was a serious drawback. The Dean and Chapter and the Board accordingly agreed to accept this transfer, although it involved a rent of £25 a year and considerable expense for upkeep. In addition to serving the purposes already mentioned, the possession of these premises by the Cathedral has made it possible to secure that the good work in connection with the Young Men's Friendly Society, so long carried on with great success by the Honorary Secretary of the Fishamble Street Mission, should be continued under his capable management; and it is confidently hoped that many of the old subscribers to the Mission will continue to contribute towards the expenses of carrying on such fruitful Christian work among boys and young men in the Mission buildings. Mr. A. G. Wolseley, 15 Elgin Road, and Mr. James Wheatley, 152 Pembroke Road, Dublin, gladly continue to receive contributions to this good object; or they may be sent to the Dean.

In view of these increased responsibilities, which it would obviously have been wrong not to accept, and considering the fact that the serious condition of the external stonework of several of the windows of Christ Church Cathedral will necessarily involve a heavy outlay as soon as the means are forthcoming to meet it, the Board earnestly appeal to their fellow-Churchmen and Churchwomen in the United Dioceses to become subscribers to the Special Sustentation and Repair Fund, so that the beautiful Cathedral, which has been provided for us, may be worthily maintained, and may continue to serve the useful and necessary purposes in the Church life of our Diocese, for which it exists, to the glory of God and the benefit of His Church.
